The ONA puts special emphasis on the Muliebral, the feminine. This is seen in many mss particularly the embracing of Baphomet, the archetypal feminine dark God. Throughout many mss, it is emphasised men ought to embrace their natural feminine energy and women ought to develop the feminine energy which they naturally have control of. As has been seen with recent European aeonics of femininity and masculinity, the embracing of such feminine energies in males leads, as societies have always known, to weak men. Such weak men cannot be nexions nor bring forth the nexion for Vindex, the archetypal bringer of the Imperium or new Aeon.

One of the main criticisms the ONA has and states repeatedly is seeing old Aeons as barbaric and brutal and attributing this to the Masculous energy. The supposed solution is to act in the opposite manner and embrace the Muliebral over the Masculous. This is clearly an idea dreamt up by a Neophyte with no understanding of Aeonics or basic social and historical workings. The 7FW may, in part, be a way to develop the muliebral but also it is to develop the masculous. Particularly in men in order to counteract the Muliebral propaganda of modern European society.

To become oneself, one must see beyond the apparent opposites and causal abstractions. One must not be so ignorant as to apply societal gender roles to the concept of the Masculous and Muliebral, as if they are inherently at odds. To believe in such animosity is to fail to see reality and pragmatic usage of natural aspects of individuals. Instead, as is clear to all who see beyond such abstractions, there is to be a balance of these energies both exoterically and esoterically. This balance does not mean an even division of 50 per-cent masculous and 50 per-cent muliebral, but to develop one's natural tendency in terms of pragmatics as opposed to a supposed ideal, justified by non-existent abstractions. Exoterically speaking, men develop their masculine traits and women their feminine traits and both develop a sense of the other in order to be a better person as oneself and as a partner in a collective.
